LOOP CHRONICLES

BOOK THREE

The Forty-Day Clause

He ran because he was afraid the city would be forgiven.

Pheugon reads sentences aloud. When he is ordered to proclaim a city's demolition in forty days, he runs — not from fear, but from arithmetic. The Scales that weighs every act has never been wrong, and it cannot weigh a turning.

Trope believes mercy exists. She simply does not believe it is coming to her. Two children meet across the one thing neither can give the other.
