I started to write that a person has worth, and stopped.

I stopped because the sentence cannot be argued with, and nobody thinks in front of a sentence like that. So I dropped the argument and went to the places where usefulness really does fall to zero.

Someone who cannot do anything yet. Someone stopped for a while. Someone handing back one ability at a time. Someone skilled with nowhere to use it. In all four places people do the same kinds of things. What people do cannot be argued with.

Eighteen chapters, each ending with one thing to do today, and each leaving one thing unresolved. The last chapter closes on a question with nothing written after it.
