

The shop with the queue last year is gone.

The old one at the end of the same street is still there. Which was better at business? That the question is wrong is where this book starts.

A franchise that opened five hundred stores in two years and a shop that has sold one thing for a thousand years, measured with the same ruler. Three clocks, four bridges, and four paths.

Most things that lasted were not planned. They just never disappeared. Which makes this a game that favours whoever started late.
