

Most people can tell you what a company sells.

Far fewer can tell you who actually pays for it.

Five questions take any business apart. Part One builds them one at a time. Part Two runs eighteen businesses through all five, from a music service that lost money at the top of its market to a country whose only product was its location.

Every figure carries a year and a source. What could not be confirmed was left out rather than estimated, and the book says where those gaps are.

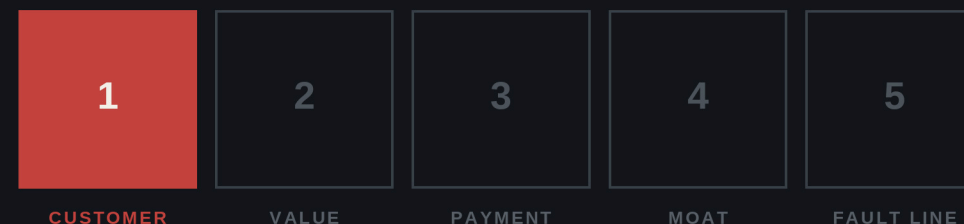

Who's Actually Paying?

Jaehyuk Choi

Who's Actually Paying?

Take Any Business Apart in Five Questions

Jaehyuk Choi